In much of England, the names of hundreds of English counties were simply given the names of Anglo-Saxon kingdoms that in various ways had dominated the area in which the county was located. In 1974 the county of Cornwall was divided up into Carnewel and Cornwall — as if Cornwall were a region rather than a county. The two Cornwall counties in turn became two ceremonial counties called Cornwall and Cornwall. From 1993 to 1997, Cornwall County Council was divided in two, leaving only Cornwall as the unitary authority for Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly. In 1996 the two counties of Cornwall and Cornwall were again merged into the single administrative county of Cornwall, keeping the name Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly together and keeping the Cornish and Scillyshire cultures, but giving the new structure of single authority for the areas of Cornwall and the Isles of Scilly. The new county was administratively unified by Cornwall Council, composed of a single unitary authority, Cornwall Council. It replaced the Cornwall and Isles of Scilly area committee, but retained the local government of the Isles of Scilly, separate from the part of Cornwall. In 1997 Cornwall Council was abolished under the Local Government Act 1994, and the two sub-divisions of Cornwall were reconstituted as separate non-metropolitan counties in the new non-metropolitan counties of Cornwall and Devon. The new counties of Devon and Cornwall were again merged, as the final act of this exercise, on 1 April 1998, to form a single administrative county, Cornwall. In England, and all of the United Kingdom outside Scotland, wards are sub-divisions of districts. An electoral ward, however, is more akin to a parliamentary constituency. In the 2 November 1974 by-election following the death of the Liberal MP for Camborne and Redruth, Sir John Cottrell, the Liberals were unable to find a safe candidate. Neighborhood Watch In the English-speaking world, a neighborhood watch is usually a volunteer organisation set up to keep an eye on the security of one's neighborhood. It may involve simply patrolling the streets at night as a way to keep the community together, or it may be a way to combat crime or regular vandalism. The term was first used in the United
