Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a gas meter, and more particularly to a gas meter capable of determining an amount of gas consumed by a user according to a voltage drop caused by a gas flow meter and a temperature of a gas flow meter. 2. Description of the Related Art Generally, a gas meter for measuring a flow rate and a volume of a gas by dropping a predetermined voltage is provided at an entrance and an exit of a pipe for connecting a gas pipe and a gas cylinder, to prevent a fire in the case of a gas leakage. The gas meter may be classified into a thermostatic gas meter that is provided with a temperature sensor for measuring a temperature of a gas, a switch type gas meter that is provided with a gas switch that is turned on/off according to a gas flow rate, a flowmeter type gas meter that is provided with a pressure sensor and a flow meter that measures a flow rate and a volume of a gas, etc. In the conventional gas meter, an error occurs in an amount of gas which is measured due to a resistance value of a flow meter and a pressure sensor, and due to a temperature error. Therefore, the amount of gas which is measured is corrected according to the resistance value of the flow meter and the temperature of the pressure sensor, and then the
