he asked if i need to do any thing to get the right key so he said no fep: yes the new version of ubuntu has backported that fix fep: go to System Settings > Privacy > Location Services and enable the other options. You may need to make sure it's enabled by default for all users. Ubuntu bug 1289538 in ubuntu-settings-components (Ubuntu) "location service should be started by default" [Undecided,Confirmed] thank you guys, it worked :) one more thing fep: np how can i know if i have all the latest versions fep, check ppa's for new versions !ppa A Personal Package Archive (PPA) can provide alternate software not normally available in the official Ubuntu repositories - Looking for a PPA? See - WARNING: PPAs are unsupported third-party packages, and you use them at your own risk. See also!addppa and!ppa-purge the reason i ask is because my google account has internet and all my other devices do not hmmm cool thank you guys fep: sudo apt-get update && sudo apt-get dist-upgrade will tell you if there are any packages you need to upgrade thank you fep: yes your google account is the problem fep: so you need to update the ppa list so, i should only use the official ubuntu? fep: you only use official ubuntu if you don't mind having a patched version ok fep: it's a choice. If you use PPAs you have to follow the instructions fep: if you don't, well...best to take the official route
