Corel VideoStudio series, .The country's top rating banks are all owned by overseas companies, according to a survey that highlights Australian efforts to ease foreign ownership rules and clean up the financial sector. The 2016 Financial System Stabilisation Fund Census, run by the Australian Prudential

Regulation Authority, found five Australian banks - Australia and New Zealand Banking Group, National Australia Bank, Westpac Banking Corp and St George Bank - were government owned. The Commonwealth, which owns the nation's major capital and development banks, is the biggest listed finance company in Australia with a market capitalisation of $71.4 billion. The proportion of the biggest 100 listed companies owned by foreign companies has reached a new high at 55 per cent, having risen for the fifth consecutive year, the latest figures show. Among the biggest 100 companies listed on Australian stock exchanges, 55 per cent are owned overseas, up from 52 per cent in 2015. “It’s a significant proportion of our market cap. It’s right around the median level for the rest of the world. It’s not even close to the proportion that you would see in the UK, Germany, or the U.S.,” Ms Barton said. The proportion of company directors who are overseas-owned has also reached a new high, at 60 per cent, but remains steady over the last six years. The ASX-listed companies with more than 50 per cent of directors and executive officers overseas are heavily weighted towards financial services and technology, at 53 per cent, followed by retail and leisure at 33 per cent, and media and construction at just under 27 per cent. On Monday, an Australian Institute of Banking and Finance report warned banks were over-expanding in property services, which led to mortgage fraud. “While housing construction and consumption has been robust, growth in the number of residential mortgage approvals has outstripped growth in income per capita,” the report said. The institute’s current home loan products monitor - aimed at helping consumers find a loan tailored to their needs - found rates were running low, despite prices having risen for some months. “The banks need to take
