Q: Linq-to-sql with multiple foreign keys in the same table In an SQL database, would the following work? I have a table called "City". Within that table are two columns that describe the city, one with the "ID" and the other with the "Name" and a "CountryID". And then another table called "Country". Within that table is a column that says "ID" and a column that says "Name". Then, I want to run a query that for a certain country I want to find all of the cities where the city.Name = "Washington" and the city.CountryID = the Country.ID. If there is only a 1-1 relation between City and Country, how would I do this? Is there a simpler/better way of doing this? I plan on adding Foreign keys later, is there any way to make this change without having to delete all of the cities and re-enter them? I was thinking something like: using (dbconn.Open()) { var query = from c in dbconn.Cities where c.CountryID == Country.ID select c; } A: I was trying to do something similar last night and although you can do it, it's not terribly elegant. In SQL you can use a join as you suggested with: SELECT city.name as [city name], country.name
