... Chicagoland Winters 2014 What a lot of fun. I got the colors right and I'm happy with the picture. I'm not great at line drawing or coloring. Some of the lines are too strong, some of the colors are too bright, but I like it anyway. I like doing the crow pictures because I use a lot of my experience drawing pictures of them. A lot of times it's a challenge to draw them the way I like them to be drawn. In the past I've always drawn crow pictures as having a single leg, but now I draw them as if they are walking all four legs. They are easier to draw, I got some great advice from my classmates. One of them said if I can draw a crow on a small piece of paper, I can draw one on a big piece of paper. So, today's lesson was to draw a crow on a big piece of paper. This was pretty cool. The parts that were easy to draw are the colors I already knew I was good at. The hard parts were the lines. Drawing the outline of the crow's face was hard. But, I got a lot of feedback on my line. I can tell that my hand is getting stronger. I am very interested in getting feedback. It's hard to get it when I don't know which part of the picture I'm good at and which part of the picture I need more practice on. So, I thought of doing another drawing to learn more about my strengths and weaknesses. I did this drawing on a big piece of paper. I used my 6x6 pad and made sure it was big enough. I also gave myself a lot of time to draw, which I learned from my drawing class this week. My classmates were there to help and guide me. They made the proper noises when I made a mistake, and they made me correct it. I would have paid them money if they had, but they wouldn't take it. I'm not going to have another drawing until Friday. I think I learned a lot and I want to practice what I've learned. I feel like my hand is getting better and I want to make sure I learn as much as I can. I can see myself enjoying this class more as I get better and better at drawing. I want 2d92ce491b
