Before we begin, we should first make it clear what exactly an ad blocker is. AdBlock is a popular ad blocker that has been used by millions of people across the globe, and the developer claims that it has enabled an average of 10 to 20 more hours of free time each month. AdGuard is a different ad blocker, it is based on the idea of anti-ad blocking and combines the functionality of a typical ad blocker with an antivirus scanner. It's usually referred to as an anti-malware ad blocker. The ad blocker has a host of different features that include not just blocking ads, but also catching and cleaning malware, deleting cookies, preventing malware from stealing personal information, and so on. Ad blockers are completely free. There is no extra charge, and it doesn't even use a lot of system resources. They're great because they make your web browsing safer. Ad blockers can be downloaded from a variety of different websites, and it's recommended that you download the best ad blocker for you. We'll provide you with the best ad blocker software that will protect you from malware, help you to clean the ads and cookies, and help you to protect your privacy as well. Ad Blocking Technology Explained Now that you know what an ad blocker is, let's talk about how it works. There are many different types of ad blockers, and they can work in different ways. For example, some ad blockers scan your web browser when it starts up, and this is referred to as an in-browser ad blocker. Other ad blockers operate at the DNS level, they prevent advertisements from loading in the first place. AdGuard, on the other hand, combines the functionality of an in-browser and DNS ad blocker, as well as a host of different anti
