Sh4 1 34Clive Hamilton has accused Liberal National MPs of 'unanimous' support for the repeal of section 18C of the Racial Discrimination Act. Key points: Clive Hamilton says "it just needed an enthusiast" to bring Section 18C into disrepute Clive Hamilton says "it just needed an enthusiast" to bring Section 18C into disrepute Attorney-General George Brandis has said there's "no case" to repeal the law Attorney-General George Brandis has said there's "no case" to repeal the law Tony Abbott said he'd repeal Section 18C as soon as possible Independent senator and human rights advocate Dr Hamilton said the Bill should be passed and the law repealed, citing the claim of Liberal MPs that they were able to support the repeal "because they had their friends in the media, I suppose". "What it needed was someone to just get enthusiastic about the matter and to get a few of the media in behind him," he said. He said he thought it was "actually quite extraordinary" that every Liberal MP voted in support of the Bill. "There's something unhealthy about an opposition party supporting something which they themselves will repeal," he said. "But it was unanimous, everyone in the Liberal Party seems to have gone along with their own colleagues." In response, Senator Brandis said the section was not working and had never been supported by most Australians. "My opposition colleagues might like to point out that the Labor Party have voted four times in the past decade to repeal section 18C," he said. "They might want to tell the Australian people that over that time, only one person has been successfully prosecuted for making a racially vilifying comment, and that person was a Liberal Party member." But Mr Abbott said he thought there was "no case" for repealing the section. "The section 18C of the act has never been well thought through, it's never been well implemented, it was always subject to criticism from me as a former attorney general 3ef4e8ef8d
