Advanced Hook National Dining Challenge Winners Announced: Burger King Three winners in the National Dining Challenge were announced yesterday, and they all came from Burger King. The Whopper-loving fried-chicken chain earned a total of $17,800 for its participation in the program. These winners, as well as the two entrants that were announced before them, will be announced as the week goes on. Voting continues in the challenge, but to vote you have to be a part of the MyPoints program, so your mileage on the contest may not be as good as others. From now until the end of August, those who earn one million points or more during their MyPoints program will have a chance at winning $10,000. To be fair, the Whopper is a McDonalds' product now, so I don't really care that much. I'm not a big fast food eater, but the burger is really good. And it's one of the most caloric. It's still pretty hard to get calories for the money, but it's better than the kids meals. I like the new version that came out recently where they give you like a bun and a toothpick. You can make pretty good fries out of it. When you walk through a Walmart Supercenter, you'll see an impressive collection of toys, electronics, groceries and more. But, if you look closely, you'll also see a very colorful wall of tag sales. If you're wondering how this is done, you can find the answer in the supercenter lab. It's no secret that the world's largest retailer has figured out a way to make those dollar tags go farther at Walmart. They'll be on display here at the Lab, and let's see how they do it. The first tag is number 4,600,249. That's not an "S." That's a word. "Zentangle." You want to have a tag that goes on a

In a wide range of human cancers, hypoxia induces the transcription of a number of genes, including those involved in angiogenesis and invasion, which confer increased tumour aggressiveness. Hypoxia-inducible factor-1 (HIF-1) is the molecular effector of the cellular response to hypoxia, and its activation has been correlated with the development of tumours such as breast, prostate, and thyroid cancers. To date, however, there have been no studies concerning the role of HIF-1 in adrenocortical carcinoma (ACC). In this study, we analysed the expression of HIF-1alpha in 24 ACCs, and we compared it to the expression of HIF-1alpha in 13 benign adrenal adenomas and 6 normal adrenal glands. HIF-1alpha protein expression was detected by immunohistochemistry, and the results were semiquantitatively evaluated. HIF-1alpha was overexpressed in 17/24 (71%) ACCs, 11/13 (85%) benign adenomas, and 6/6 (100%) normal adrenal glands. ACCs with high HIF-1alpha expression had a higher
