Sen. Bernie Sanders Bernie Sanders McConnell accuses Democrats of sowing division by 'downplaying progress' on election security The Hill's Campaign Report: Arizona shifts towards Biden | Biden prepares for drive-in town hall | New Biden ad targets Latino voters Why Democrats must confront extreme left wing incitement to violence MORE (I-Vt.) launched a fundraising blitz Monday over the weekend in an effort to woo donors who have given to him in the past, suggesting he can still raise money while he has very little support. His campaign raised $4.6 million in 24 hours after his announcement Friday that he would not seek the Democratic nomination and made more than $3 million over the weekend. ADVERTISEMENT "I hope the contributions from donors who have given to us before will be enough to secure our campaign on June 7," Sanders said. Sanders has spent nearly half his time in the race raising money in an effort to ensure he has a viable cash-on-hand after he formally drops out of the presidential race on Tuesday. "We are going to win this thing," Sanders said in a video message over the weekend. He began huddling with senior advisers on Monday to strategize about what would happen if he doesn't secure the 1,991 pledged delegates needed to win the nomination. There are 1,991 pledged delegates out of 2,763 overall, including superdelegates, available for Sanders to win on June 7. Sanders said he has spent much of his time in the race raising money as well as campaigning, but that most of it has gone to support Democratic down-ballot candidates. He's spent about $8.9 million in the race. But he said he is still prepared to compete in the states still voting on Tuesday, where he will be on the ballot. But a successful effort to win back some of the Iowa and New Hampshire supporters, who were the main backers of his campaign, will depend on keeping up his level of fundraising. The Sanders campaign believes it would likely raise about $5 million on Tuesday in the large states that remain in the nominating contest. But it would not be able to afford to compete on the scale of traditional Democrats in states like Florida, Nevada and California, which are worth far more in pledged delegates. Sanders' campaign sent out a fundraising email Tuesday on behalf of the Democratic Party in an effort to keep donors who

Q: Is there any way to get a "count" of methods inside a parent class? I have a class with a method that I call once at the beginning of the file. `void common_init() { ... }` Is there any way to get a count of the methods inside this class? so for example: `class foo { void common_init() { /*... */ } };`
`std::cout`
