The following drivers are known to work.Q: Finding the difference between two dates in a MySQL database using PHP I am writing a PHP script that creates an account at a website based on a date, however the system I am using creates the account on the first of the month, so if the user doesn't register on the second of the month there is a gap until the 3rd or 4th. I am trying to figure out how to get the difference in days between the current date and the first day of the month it should create an account. A: First, you need to store the date when the user registered. You can do that in the database as a TIMESTAMP or DATETIME data type, if you want to store the time as well. Then, in your PHP script, you can use the timestamp to find the first day of the month, using strtotime(). This will return the number of seconds since Unix Epoch, which you can convert to a day. $unix_timestamp = strtotime
