left atrial size and atrial fibrillation: A meta-analysis. There is little evidence on the association between left atrial (LA) size and atrial fibrillation (AF) in the general population. The aim of this meta-analysis was to clarify whether LA size is associated with the risk of AF. We searched for articles regarding the association between LA size and the risk of AF in PubMed and Embase up to March 2015. In total, 23 studies involving 8,586 AF cases and 12,457 non-AF controls were included. After adjustment for all confounding factors, LA size was associated with the risk of AF (OR = 1.16, 95% CI: 1.12-1.19,

P Decreased and modified expression of cathepsins B and L in metastatic mammary cancer cells. Cathepsins B and L (cysteine proteases) can mediate proteolysis that facilitates degradation of the extracellular matrix in malignant tumors. Accordingly, elevated cathepsin activity has been correlated with tumor metastasis. In the present study, we demonstrated decreased expression of cathepsins B and L in metastatic tumor cells isolated from mice with mammary tumors. Furthermore, our results revealed that the cathepsins B and L proteolytic activity was also decreased in these cells. We identified a novel protease inhibitor, alpha2-macroglobulin, that was significantly decreased in metastatic mammary cancer cells and in the sera of mice with mammary tumors. alpha2-Macroglobulin may act as an anti-protease by interacting with cathepsins B and L. This interaction results in inhibition of cathepsin B and L activity. Thus, a protease inhibitor, alpha2-macroglobulin, may influence both the tumor growth and the metastatic potential of
