Modern communication systems generally contain a variety of system elements for routing calls from one terminal to another terminal connected to a destination. Central offices (CO) and tandem offices, for example, are commonly employed to route telephone calls from one terminal to another through intermediate local switching points. The central office generally includes a telecommunication switch for interfacing the telephone network to the public switched telephone network (PSTN). The telephone network, in turn, typically interfaces with a number of local subscribers or telephone terminals, which are typically connected to the telephone network through a subscriber loop. The telephone terminal interfaces with the
