By now it should be clear that Google has a huge influence on how your website fares in search results. And if you're unable to rank for your desired keywords, it's highly likely that those have been already taken by someone else. That's why keyword research is crucial to web success. After all, when it comes to SEO, who knows more about your target audience – you or the search engines? Keywords: Not All Are Created Equal Keywords are everywhere, and not just in the form of keywords on websites and posts. You've probably noticed that some of them appear in unexpected places, like on product images and reviews on e-commerce platforms. This goes beyond images and videos, and includes even the reviews of a game you might have purchased. Google often displays reviews that are associated with a certain item (known as reviews rich snippets). It gets even more confusing. If you're an e-commerce site, Google will display product reviews that are actually associated with the same product. This can lead to ranking for hundreds of unrelated keywords – all because of a single keyword. That’s why you need to employ a variety of methods and tools when conducting your keyword research. Without getting too much into the technicalities, we will try to explain what you need to know to start producing valuable content and targeting relevant keywords. The most common types of keyword research tools 1. Keyword research tools for content writers Content writers are often not focused on getting traffic or rankings. They simply need to create great content. That’s why they often resort to keyword research tools. Key

Add one or more keywords Analyze results Analyze related keywords Filters How to use keywords More features Price: Free Platform: Windows Ok folks, the conversation is now over. A few of you have already said enough, while some of you seem to be stuck in the old movies. I've got to give it up, as it is late. A new day is upon us, with new challenges, new fun, and new knowledge. First off, a few points. First off, as I said, I am going to be down to about two hours of video a day, and that is being the case, as of now. I will make that clear, and I will make it even more clear that I will be working as little as possible on tomorrow's video, as there will be a lot to review. Secondly, as with last time, I will make the video shorter, as most of you all seem to have problems with my longer videos. I am going to try to keep them at under an hour, while still giving you plenty of value, so you can get your work done. Lastly, I am going to continue this blog format, and comment on the last few minutes of today's video, so that way, I can comment on all of your questions, as I work through them. Now, enough rambling, let's get to the good stuff. Answering the questions, both old and new, has been a bit of a challenge, especially with what I have done so far. Again, it is going to be a question and answer type of video, so I have to write down my thoughts, while at the same time, letting you all know, what I mean. I am going to start with, "How do you know what you know?" And, for this, I want to touch on something that I have not really mentioned, and that is the web. The Internet, really. The WWW, and so on. The web is an amazing place, and a place that I have only recently, really started to utilize. The web allows you to find out what you need to know, and what you do not. You get there, and you find that you need to know this. You get there, and you find that you do not. Which is the case for most of us here, and when I say, most, I really mean almost all of you. The second question, asked by some of you, is about finding out what you need to know. To that end, I want to touch on something, that I have not really touched on. That is information. There are a few different types of information out there. There is web information, there are community information, there is academic information, there is work knowledge, and then there is life knowledge. This brings us to the third
