Looking at the latest news, you'd be forgiven for thinking that it's a pretty gloomy time for investors. Many of the major financial institutions have acknowledged that the actions they are taking as part of their response to the coronavirus pandemic are going to lead to major losses, and the impact of these losses on the global economy is very uncertain. The continued lockdown measures across Europe and the number of COVID-19 cases continues to rise across the US. It's the moment to discuss the long-term solution. The new coronavirus is in a class of its own — one that has never before been seen in the human population. But now there is a herd immunity. It's time to take stock of what we know and what we don't know about the virus, and look at the long-term solutions. The overall projection that the world economy — and specifically the global stock market — will start to rebound by 2021 is incredibly optimistic and reflects the amount of money being pumped into the economy by governments and central banks. For example, if we look at the US, the recovery is going to be a lot better for Wall Street than for Main Street, and a lot better for the “middle-class” than for the “working-class”. The recovery can be expected to be extremely bumpy due to the amount of debt that's been built up — which isn't going to get erased overnight. If we talk about the long-term solution, we have to first talk about economics. Here's the chart that 1cb139a0ed
