Learn To Listen Listen To Learn 1 Answer Key.rarVoices of Women Who Succeed Recent Research on Female Leadership Research on female leadership has only recently gained serious interest in the public. In 1990, the U.S. Bureau of the Census did a random sample of high school graduates asking them what percentage of their teachers were female and what percentage of their parents were male. Their findings showed that one of the most common responses was that women don't deserve the right to lead. This wrong started early in her life. In fact, a female child was roughly twice as likely to be ranked last than to be ranked first. Despite all of these odds, women still outnumber men in many professions. They are doctors, attorneys, architects, accountants and so many more. Today, about one-third of the students entering science, technology, engineering and mathematics (STEM) fields are female. And more and more women are learning coding and creating their own successful startups. Women In Leadership In the past 50 years, women have made immense gains in the fields of law, medicine, government, business and nonprofits. From the 1970s to 1990, the percentage of women CEOs actually declined. Female leadership was once looked down upon in the business world and socialization issues prevented women from running for office. But as Gloria Steinem wrote in Ms. Magazine in 1983, "When it became perfectly clear to me that the most feminist contribution a woman could make was to lead, I left nursing to become a corporate officer and then a firm leader in business and the professions." We can attribute the recent growth of female leadership to many factors and for the most part it is positive. More women are taking leadership positions in government, nonprofits, and businesses. They're in more positions of power and they're speaking up. They're making change. They're a positive force in this world and they're making it a better place for all.
