Background
=====
Calcineurin inhibitors are effective anti-TNF agents in the treatment of inflammatory bowel disease (IBD). However, clinical improvements are usually limited, and are associated with chronic inflammation, weight loss, and increased risk of infection. Recent data suggest that treatment with calcineurin inhibitors, especially in the long term, could also lead to the development of lymphoproliferative disorders (LPD).

Methods
=====
To address this issue, we will conduct an international multicenter clinical trial, "Biologics in Crohn's disease (BIOCro)" - a 12-month, double-blind, parallel-group, placebo-controlled trial with a follow-up of 48 weeks. The primary objective is to assess the efficacy of treatment with the mammalian target of rapamycin (mTOR) inhibitor everolimus in combination with conventional IBD therapy and corticosteroids, in IBD patients refractory to conventional therapy. The secondary objectives are: 1. to assess the drug-related safety of treatment with everolimus; 2. to identify the clinical and biological factors associated with a positive response to treatment with everolimus; and 3. to assess the response to treatment with everolimus during the study period in a subgroup of patients with LPD. To avoid drug-related LPD, patients with LPD before inclusion will be excluded. Results

Conclusion
=====
The study has been approved in November 2007 and aims at the inclusion of 200 patients to be randomized to one of the following treatments: (1) the mTOR inhibitor everolimus; (2) the mTOR inhibitor everolimus plus conventional treatment; (3) placebo plus conventional treatment. Written informed consent will be obtained from all subjects prior to any procedure. All subjects will be followed for 48 weeks. Blood will be collected at inclusion and after 24 and 48 weeks of treatment.

Conclusion
=====
The study is designed to assess the efficacy and safety of mTOR inhibitor treatment in IBD patients refractory to conventional therapy. or the surface. One of the best parts is that with a HDPI phone, the figure in the shadow will
