mobile.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a wideband external antenna for a compact cellular telephone, which operates based on a wideband MIMO (multiple input multiple output) transmission method. 2. Description of the Related Art In a wideband digital cellular phone network, up to two terminals can simultaneously perform communication in a same frequency band. Communication method using a quadrature modulator/demodulator (QM/QD) is being widely used in the frequency bandwidth of 800-960 MHz, which is being used in a wideband digital cellular phone. The QM/QD method is a method of digitally-modulating a data series and orthogonally demodulating the data series by using two modulators and two demodulators. FIG. 1 is a block diagram showing the configuration of a wideband telephone terminal to which a QM/QD method is applied. In the figure, reference numeral 101 denotes a baseband digital signal processor (hereinafter referred to as a baseband signal processor) which performs digital signal processing on a baseband digital signal. Reference numeral 102 denotes a digital orthogonal modulator which performs binary quadrature modulation by a digital QM signal on the baseband digital signal. Reference numeral 103 denotes a high-frequency circuit for converting the digital QM signal to an analog signal and converting a modulation signal to a signal of a desired frequency band. Reference numeral 104 denotes an antenna switch which selects a desired antenna for transmission by switching the antennas. Reference numeral 105 denotes an analog orthogonal demodulator which analog demodulates the d0c515b9f4
