The Power of the Wind

Laura Piampiano is best known for the projects she completes as an environmental artist, public art beautifier, and political activist. In this, her first spoken poem performance, she takes the audience on a journey of wind and memory. In her words, "The Power of the Wind."

THE POWER OF THE WIND

I hold a small light in my hand. You can barely see it for the vastness of the night's cover. Slowly, I light up the wind. Then slowly, I bring it to my face, taking in the air, the wind. The wind of a four-year old girl, her T-shirt blown into her rib cage, the wind of her smile. The wind of a school full of children filling with cheers as their teacher gets up, walking to her car, which is driven by the wind, pulling her in, the wind of an engineer, releasing the speed, beginning to fly. The wind of her mother's wordless promise, that wind. And my little cup. As I draw closer to the wind, I feel the weight of my own body. Sweat dripping, arms clammy, wind cold as I touch it for the first time. I rest my free hand on my chest, and as I do, I feel the steady, tugging rhythm of my own heart. Then, I realize that my heart is a wind, and it's beating out its own rhythm. Like all of us. My breath is in my chest, slowly, but it's not deep, not like my mother's. It's the wind inside of me. This is the wind of the wind, the heartbeat of the heart, the wind within the wind. The cold wind, the ocean breath, the rushing wind. The air I breathe. It's all the same. It all breathes. It's the power of the wind. I press my hands on my chest, pushing me together. I breathe, I breathe. As I look up at the small lights of the wind in the sky, I am aware of

What's New In?

The effect of root dilator on the force of molar intrusion. One hundred and thirty-five patients received intrusive forces from light-activated springs (Lucitone 199). A clinician selected the proper diameter of a temporary root dilator used to remove occlusal interferences. At monthly recall examinations, the teeth were checked and the amount of intrusion was measured. The teeth were separated into 3 groups according to their degree of intrusion: none, minimal, and moderate. The data show that a reduced root length is required when a large amount of intrusion is planned. The cause of reduced root length was not determined.
