Re: Help Tracing a 3f file in Photoshop

An aspect of Photoshop that is hard for the novice to understand is how to change the opacity of a layer or group of layers. This is commonly referred to as "locking" a layer or group. Here's how to do this: 1. Open the file you want to lock. 2. Click on the Layers icon at the bottom of the layer panel, and then choose Lock Layer from the menu. A dialog box appears, as shown in Figure 3-1. The Layers panel and the Lock Layer dialog box appear. You may also find that some or all of the layers in the file are locked. 3. Click OK, and then save the file. 4. Close the file. The layers are locked. Now, whenever you want to edit the image, you can't see the layers. No matter how many times you edit and save the image, the layers are still locked. If you want to edit the image and keep the layers visible, click the tiny image icon at the top-left corner of the Layers panel, or choose View > Show Layers, or press -Z. You can also open the file in Photoshop Elements and lock layers there. In this version of Photoshop, the Lock Layers command is on the Format bar, where you can see it in Figure 3-2. FIGURE 3-1: Unlock the layer(s) you want to edit. FIGURE 3-2: The Format bar has this valuable feature. When it's time to save the file, you're given the opportunity to save a copy of the image without the locked layers. Unfortunately, it's rather tricky to do this if the layers aren't locked when you save the file for the first time. Photoshop defaults to saving a copy of the file with the locked layers. But if the layers aren't locked, then when you close the file and save a copy, Photoshop doesn't make any changes to the layers. Because of this, when you open the copy, you must first unlock the layers and then save it again. So if you're going to save a copy of the file for a first-time user, ask him to lock the layers first.

The EROI of the ${@p} {@return} of {}. The 'empty' or 'general' return type is an alias for $}. ~~~ TeMPOraL Interesting, I didn't know that - thanks. Having said that, if we're looking at system with storage, the energy needed for that is just a relatively small fraction of the energy needed for the energy needed for computation. Even if storing a digital bit is less than free (it's right now less than 0.0004), the fact is that storing a bit can be done without transferring energy from the original source, and a society with lots of storage capacity may be capable of using the rest of the energy it's worth to build a clock with. ~~~ gumby Well we are still in a simulation right? So it's really not that easy. It would be useful to have a history of costs as a function of technological progress: from fire to steam to batteries to electric. And then there are others like taxes. But EROI is just one aspect. Efficiencies of specific hardware are another important dimension -- for example a forklift may be more efficient than a truck. ~~~ TeMPOraL > _Well we are still in a simulation right? So it's really not that easy._ I mean, if we're actually in a simulation we might never be able to know what values we're saving. It's extremely unlikely in our current reality, but not _impossible_. ~~~ bluecalm I don't think it's the only simulation. So if lifeform exits one that doesn't have a large portion of the matter in the form of the chemical bonds represents, wouldn't we be able to be aware of that? ~~~ TeMPOraL Ah, I see, we're in a single simulation. That makes sense. ------ johnny99 I wish our educational system would place more emphasis on the importance of energy and the power of the human brain rather than the mere five syllable etymology of the term "energy". ~~~ walrus01 I'm ok with them placing less emphasis on the p-word but I'd like to see them talk about the

Q: How can I set a List as a property of an object in C#? I want to set a List property as below. public class AutoD { public int ID { get; set; } public List BIDS { get; set; } } public class AutoD_SubA { public int SubID { get; set; } } I'm not sure how to set BIDS or the List property as below. When I try to set it like this: AutoD te = new AutoD { ID = 567, BIDS = new List { new AutoD_SubA { SubID = 909 } } }; I get the error "The best overloaded method match for 'System.Collections.Generic.List' has some invalid arguments." What is the correct way to set a List property as a property of a class? A: Try AutoD te = new AutoD { ID = 567, BIDS = new List { new AutoD_SubA { SubID = 909 } } }; Your BIDS property is not set correctly. Change it to public List BIDS { get; set; } As for your second error, I think that what you wanted to set up was AutoD te = new AutoD { ID = 567, BIDS = { new AutoD_SubA { SubID = 909 } } }; The present invention relates to an etchant composition for metal-coated substrates having a low etch rate for the metal. Certain materials are often used in the construction of vehicles, such as airplanes, and in the fabrication of various items of furniture and the like. Such materials include painted materials and paints, metals, and various types of surfaces. Thus, some construction materials, such as metallic finishes, must be protected from corrosion. Some paints are water sensitive. Depending on the type of paint, water exposure may be very deleterious to the physical properties of the paint. Metal surfaces must be protected from corrosion. An example of such a substrate is the top surface of an airplane
