I am always on the look for a new game that plays pretty well. has to be the answer. The next step, after pulling the ticket out of storage, is to take it to a shop that can re-bond your ticket at a higher price, and issue a new ticket. I found a few at the Hudson Valley, NY headquarters of MileagePlus, but it is not uncommon to drive into your local AAA for this service. My 50,000 mile ticket was resubmitted for higher reimbursement, and a New York State renewal. The renewal was done online, and I once again had the nice, long, slow, and nearly pain-free process. Do not be afraid of processing your claim, the process is simple and done the majority of the time by a real person. I did not wait nearly as long for my renewal, which was a good thing since I had to go to the DMV for my current driver's license, and I was running a bit short on time and I had to go to the Eastchester DMV. The renewal process at that DMV was pretty straightforward for someone with a 50K mile ticket. I did have to go to a branch in White Plains, which the Eastchester branch was not equipped to process the renewal - and as I understand this is the case for NY, but not all states. When I drive out of state, I have the courtesy ticket, and I explain to the border patrol agent where my ticket is, what it is for, and if I am a member of the military, I will usually get escorted out of the country. Lucky -- I had a similar experience. Resubmitted to AAA for higher reimbursement because I would not be traveling often enough to save on costs. New York State Renewal, this time online, took less than a month. I didn't renew my ticket, but I didn't pay off either one either. I just pay the full fee yearly, and have my tickets renewed to cover miles accrued. I use my insurance with one carrier for both insurance and rental coverage. I'm new to this forum but I figure I should provide some info as I'm an old-timer and I feel that I have the same problem... I have a 50,000 miles time expired drivers license and the insurance company has no record of any current insurance on my vehicle. I called AAA and they said they could not process it until I had 30,000 miles on the
